1. Brazilian Communist painter Rubens Fortes Bustamante Sa, who won first prize for 1949 in the annual contest of the Salao Nacional de Beles Artes and was awarded a trip to Geneva, left Brazil on 9 May 1950. It is reported that he planned to meet two other prominent Brazilian Communists in France after visiting Geneva and Rome. These two individuals are Candido Portinari, who left Rio with his family for Cannes on 10 November 1949 to visit France and Italy, and Jorge Amado, who attended the Stockholm meeting of the World Committee of Partisans of Peace in March.

The Communist Press

2. The financial condition of the Rio de Janeiro Communist daily Imprensa Popular is very precarious at present for two reasons: 1) the Communist Party of Brazil (PCB) has been unable to render any financial assistance to the paper, and 2) the Movimento de Ajuda a Imprensa Popular ("AIP") has failed miserably in its attempt to raise funds. As the Imprensa Popular has not been able to meet many of its debts, several of its creditors have threatened to take legal action. Heider Sucena, local attorney, started proceedings to obtain a lien against the paper's machinery for money owed him, but Pedro Pomar, Communist Federal Deputy dissuaded him.
- X 3. The Sao Paulo police recently raided the Communist publishing and distributing firm Empresa de Jornais e Revista located at Rua da Liberdade, 118, Sao Paulo. Source states that this firm is under the direction of the well-known Communist agitator Herta Barbara Wullert. It is one of the places where much of the clandestine propaganda of the Party is written, and one of the central distributing points for worker groups and groups in rural communities. Several arrests were made during the raid, but the individuals were later released for lack of evidence.

4. The Brazilian Communist Party (PCB) cell among the employees of the chamber of municipal councilmen in the Federal District recently held a meeting in the municipal chamber to arrange the details of a campaign in defense of the country's national wealth. The meeting place was facilitated by pro-Communist councilman Breno da Silveira, President of the Centro de Estudos e Defesa do Petroleo e da Economia Nacional, who presided. The following Party members were among those attending: proceed

Lia Correia Dutra, journalist and an editor of the PCB publication Para Todos

Flavio Soares

Dea (Alidea) Paraguassu de Arruda Camara, wife of Communist Federal Deputy Diogenes de Arruda Camara

Luiz Nunes Castanheira, employee of Voz Operaria.

5. In Niteroi, State of Rio de Janeiro, the Communists prior to 15 August 1949 organized the Clube Fluminense das Nações Unidas (Rio United Nations Club), with offices at Rua Oliveira Botelho, 1576, Neves, Niteroi. This club, together with its affiliate the Clube Gonçalense das Nações Unidas, was reported to be organizing meetings and conferences at which Communist speakers propounded the Party line. Among the members of the organization were the following individuals:

Captain Jose Leoncio Pessoa Andrade, a Communist who was elected president of the Associacao dos Ex-Combatentes do Brasil (ADECB) in 1948

Emmo Duarte*

Walkirie de Freitas, reported in 1947 as being an alternate member of the National Committee of the PCB and in 1948 as Political Secretary of the PCB State Committee for the State of Rio de Janeiro

Pedro Motta Lima, director of the Communist daily Imprensa Popular

Alvaro Moreira, director of the Communist publication Para Todos

Lourival de Costa Oliveira, previously reported as Secretary of Organization of the PCB State Committee of Rio de Janeiro

Lincoln Cardeiro Oest, Communist secretary of the Partido Popular Progressista (PPP)**

Paulo Cesar Pimentel, reported in 1947 as being president of the PPP for the State of Rio de Janeiro.
